How to get single value from an array in PHP. Topic: PHP / MySQL Prev|Next. Answer: Use the Array Key or Index. If you want to access an individual value form an indexed, associative or multidimensional array you can either do it through using the array index or key. Let's check out the following example to understand how it basically works: I am working on an SMS app and need to be able to convert the sender's phone number from +11234567890 to 123-456-7890 so it can be compared to records in a MySQL database.. The numbers are stored in the latter format for use elsewhere on the site and it would rather not change that format as it would require modifying a lot of code. However, if no callback function is specified, all empty entries of array will be removed, such as "" (an empty string), 0 (0 as an integer), NULL, FALSE and array() (an empty array). Let's try out an example to understand how it actually works: The Formatter PHP online was created to help with debugging.
